My name is Peng Yu (or 于鹏 in Chinese characters). I am a Lecturer of Chinese in the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures in the University of New Mexico (Albuquerque, NM). I am currently teaching first-year to third-year college level Chinese language courses. In my Chinese language classes, I have adopted a student-centered approach in which students are given plenty of opportunities to actually communicate in Chinese meaningfully. I am passionate about teaching, and am willing to work with all students who are enthusiastic about learning Chinese language and culture. Students often appreciate my energetic teaching style as well as great patience. Integrating technology seamlessly in language classes has been one of my professional interests since my first day in teaching.

Before joining UNM, I taught a good variety of undergraduate Chinese language courses in the College of William and Mary (Williamsburg, VA), including regular beginning level to upper-intermediate level classes, Chinese for heritage speakers, summer intensive classes, and beginning business Chinese (for alumni). I also taught Chinese classes at all levels including AP Chinese with Virtual Virginia, a fully online course program provided by the Virginia Department of Education.
