

My name is Corrina Shih. Currently I am teaching Chinese at a university in Southern California. I completed my Master's Degree in Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) and my teaching credential in Chinese from California State University, Fullerton in 2008. Since then, I have been teaching Chinese for more than seven years in public school and university settings. Teaching students from different age groups is a very rewarding experience for me because I have seen my students succeed in their language learning journey, expand their world vision, and become more culturally sensitive.

From my teaching experience, I like to include the Chinese culture into my language course. Language and culture are intertwined and inseparable. I believe embedding the culture element in a language classroom definitively will enrich the language class and engaging the students more.
